Discuss the notion of appearance and reality in the play.

King Lear is based on appearance and reality. Both fathers in the main plot and the subplot deal with children who deceive by appearance. Lear is taken by false words and appearances just as Gloucester is. Add to this several characters in the play appear to be someone but they turn out to be others such as Edgar disguised as a beggar and Kent disguised as a servant. What concerns the fact, he appears to be foolish but is really to be wise.

Corwall and Regan are the personification of hypocrisy. Corwall suggests, by trying to deceive her father and say that her love is inadequate compared to his. The phrase "A love that makes breaks your and opens unchild" prove it. She tries to make her love seem profane. On the other hand, Regan is no less. Regan tells her father that her love pleases him solely as the enjoyment of his love. The sister's love is a means to an end. Corwall and Regan despise their father because they cannot love him sincerely if they are married. Reading her behind appearance when Corwall and Regan remark about their father at the end of the scene on "the folly of age". They complain about Lear's rash judgment and unreasonable behavior and they are apprehensive that they will receive the same treatment of Cordelia and so they resolve that they "must do something, and I'll have it."

Appearance and reality have an effect on King Lear. Corwall is sick and tired of her father as she accuses him that due to his character the knights are behaving in an insolent way, and suggests that Cordelia's marriage seems to be since Lear is shocked as he accuses her: "Are you our daughter?" Lear puts an act, as a means of expressing his horror and astonishment and there are signs of madness. The phrases, "Then say how lower and" "This is not Lear" "Does Lear walk thus?" "Speak like this?" "Where are his eyes?" shows a King Lear who is getting weak in his senses. He accuses Corwall and says that he still has one "kind and comfortable" daughter left to go to Regan, yet she turns out to be made of the same stuff. She tells him to reduce the kingdom for her. They are a symbol of shame. The King stands and curses his daughter to give birth to a childless child that will remain her as his own bastard identity as a king. The man is used to filiality and her ingratitude in loving him.

For Lear Kent in the scene is an issue. When Kent tells Lear that "Your son and daughter" is reference to the same that you take them, Lear refuses to believe that Corwall and Regan are responsible for his servant's "shame". Lear refuses to see reality. Lear is most concerned with his own mental state as he tries to be hearing "speaked" with sorrow. He is allowed especially as if his daughters are exacting him. For the noble, Lear is shocked when he finds
