John F. Kennedy was the thirty-third president of the United States. He was the first president to reach for the moon, through the nation's space program. He also was the first president since Theodore Roosevelt (1859-1919) with whose youth could identify. He made the nation see itself with new eyes. His administration checked the world.

John Fitzgerald Kennedy was born in Brookline, Massachusetts, on May 29, 1917. He was the second son of one of the nation's leading business executives and financier Joseph P. Kennedy (1888-1965) and his wife, Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy (1890-1995). The Kennedys were a wealthy family with a history of political and public service.

Kennedy attended the Canterbury parochial school (1930-31) and the Choate School (1931-35). One of his teachers later said that people in school liked him more for his personality than for his accomplishments. He went to Harvard University, where he majored in government and international relations. During his junior year at Harvard, he traveled in Europe and observed the events that were leading to World War II. He used his observations for his senior paper, which later became the bestselling book Why England Slept (1940).

After graduating from Harvard with honors in 1940, Kennedy went to Stanford University for graduate studies. In April 1941 he tried to enlist in the U.S. Navy but was rejected for physical reasons (a back injury received while playing football). Months later, after his back strengthened through a regimen of exercises, the U.S. Navy accepted him. He then became an intelligence officer in Washington, D.C. After the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, a U.S. Navy base in Hawaii, on December 7, 1941, the United States entered World War II. Kennedy requested active duty at sea and was given this assignment in late 1942. Following Kennedy's training with the 13th Air Transport Squadron, he was shipped to the South Pacific to fight in the war against Japan. In March 1943 he was given command of a patrol torpedo (PT) boat, a small, fast boat armed with weapons, including torpedoes. In August his boat was struck by two
