Title of the essay: Money can't buy my love, what can?

Student Number: 686679

Word count of the essay: 2837

"Cause I don't care too much for money, money can't buy no love" (John Lennon, 1964). Love ignites when there is an attraction between two people. Love can be an instant hence the phrase "love at first sight", however, some take time and effort. At first attraction, judgements are made and this will determine if the relationship would be created or not. When the romantic relationship is established, each other's needs are acknowledged. But the question is what exactly underlies these feelings that begin to develop and deepen. In this essay we will explore the factors involved in romantic relationships.

How it evolved

Scientists proposed that humans evolved with sex differences to ensure maximum survival for both themselves and offspring. Evolutionary theories suggest that women are more likely to be materialistic than men. Trivers (1972) proposed the parental investment theory which states, as women are the gender to carry the baby and feed for the baby hence making the "greater parental and postnatal contribution" (pregnancy and extended period of children), they seek a man that would provide enough resources to care for her and the children. Whereas, a man needs to spread his genes, hence he seeks a fertile woman. This would suggest why women are more concerned with emotional infidelity (their man taking interest in another woman) as this would mean losing their resources, whereas, men are more likely to be jealous of sexual infidelity (their woman having sex with another man) to try and avoid the possibility of providing resources for a child that isn't theirs (Cardwell and Flanagan, 2011). Moreover, in hunter gatherer days, history has revealed that the male generation would go hunting for the wild to cook and feed the home. This led to male competition to enable females choose the best man with the highest resources to ensure he is willing to invest in her offspring (Trivers, 1972). Apart from the fact that empirical evidence cannot be collected due to inability to go back to common days, this research has serious implications on the lives of adopted children or single mothers who had "new love". This theory suggests that the men don't have to provide for children that are not from their line. Research disagrees and indicates that men don't discriminate financially between their children and those born to a current partner from their previous relationship (Anderson,
